KEEPING WINTER APPLES.

To understand how best to preserve the apples through the winter—especially those who use them only for family use—is a matter of some importance, as the apple is the king of fruit. Those who have large orchards and make apple growing a leading branch of farming, supplying the market from the beginning to the end of the season, know the value of the methods of preserving the fruit up to the first of May, when the strawberry and cherry crops make their appearance. Well, as to the way that the owner of premises where only a moderate quantity of the apple is grown, necessary to supply the family needs, how will give a few suggestions of the way to keep the fruit for a prolonged period. Of course all apples should be hand picked, and with so much care as to avoid all bruising, and those are defective and liable to rot, and those which have any portion of the skin removed or contain any evidence of the operation or presence of a worm. Pick in dry flour barrels, put in the head, pressing down the same firmly on the fruit, and place them in a perfectly dry, cool and out of the sun, there is danger of freezing, when the barrels should be removed to dry cellar, and the fruit taken out and laid upon an elevated scaffold or shelves, spread out singly, which will admit of the stock being overhauled, decayed ones and those threatening decay being once removed. The temperature of the cellar should be between 35 and 50 degrees; and where there is any excess of dampness let the barrels on which the apples are placed be liberally sprinkled with fine lime. In sorting the apples be observed to avoid bruising or injury of any kind.

Another way—This is a "cave," or rather "vault," running from the cellar wall into the solid earth outside, with a hole in the cellar, where a three inch pipe is run down to the back of the vault, and the dirt floor inclining from all points to carry away every drop of water, thus keeping the apartment dry, filled with lattice shelves, with a six inch wire air vent connected with the outside, and with a good coating of tin covering the entire bottom in case of necessity from dampness, as before stated. This is of course, attended with more expense in the first instance, but once prepared it will last for generations, and is perhaps the very best method of keeping apples for years. By it we have preserved two years ago the last of April, with the flavor quite unimpaired. —Germanian Telegraph.

PRESERVING GRAPES.

Among other methods of preserving grapes is to put them in bottles. The grapes are left attached to the canes, and the lower ends of the canes inserted in bottles of water, the bottles being so inclined that the clusters will hang free, without touching them. This method, which prevents the berries from shriveling, is very successful in preserving the grapes in their natural state. Our native grapes decay quickly in their keeping, and while we have little doubt that this method will preserve some varieties, and we have already seen to be marked, at least for the family use. An English fruit-grower has improved upon the use of bottles. Instead of bottles he makes use of troughs of glazed earthenware, which allow of more rapid turning, and convenient room. The troughs are some inches long and about four inches in width and height. Along the sides, on the inside of the troughs, and at short distance below the lower edge, is a projecting ledge, under which the lower end of the cane is caught while it is being turned. The trough is filled with water, and allows the clusters of grapes to hang clear. These troughs may rest upon brackets driven into the wall of the fruit room. Of course water must be supplied as it evaporates from the troughs, and the temperature must be kept as low as practicable without freezing. Those who wish to experiment upon keeping grapes in this manner will probably find bottles cheapest at first. Should the method we have here described be tried, wooden troughs, covered together with tin, and lined with shellac varnish, may be used, at least in the experiment, as a substitute for those of earthenware. The clusters should not touch one another. —American Agriculturist.

USE AS FOOD.

Miss Parloe, in one of her lectures on cooking, says: "The muscles of the neck and legs and certain portions of the animal's body are used constantly and as they are continually contracting and expanding, they become much tougher than other portions of the body. But they are not tender and more juicy than other portions which are tender, because there is a free flow of blood and nutriment to the muscles that are more often exercised. Keeping that in mind, and thinking of the animal as standing and moving, it is easy to remember what portions are tougher, because exercised more than others and what portions are tender, but less exercised than others. It is important to remember that steak will not be tender unless it is cut across the grain, and the exercise of the neck and legs is in a different direction from the rest of the loin. As steaks are commonly cut in this tough but juicy and nutritious, it is a safe bet that the meat of the neck and legs is much more tender and nutritious than the rest of the loin. There is another small portion which is just as good, however. It is a cut of meat on top of the round, near where the loin begins. This is the best piece in the animal for making food for invalids. The round, as you see, is divided by the bone and a thin layer of fat into an upper and a lower portion. The lower portion is always tough, as its muscles are much exercised. The upper portion is tender and makes better steaks, while the lower part is better for potting and similar uses.

CLOVERSEED.—The importance of saving their own cloverseed is not appreciated by farmers generally. It is not difficult for every one who raises clover (and who should) to save his own seed and have some to sell. It is an important and easy way to save the seed from your wheat, oat, or buckwheat. When communities are not provided with clover-seeds, it is not easy to find and clean seed, but even in such cases it is better to "cramp out" with horses seed than to buy it. There is no doubt of getting the seed entirely free, as it is so easy to save it. The seed of dried-up clover stalks in a pasture which have not been so long to their capacity. By removing the stock as soon as the pods begin to dry up, one can save from four to six pounds of seed per acre, which is better than to do without seed or to buy at the high prices which will rule next spring. We merely suggest this for the present emergency.
